Utilita bids for part of Ofgem smart metering trial

Utilita will be bidding to take part in trials to see how smart meters can help domestic energy customers cut down on energy consumption.

Ofgem, the regulator for Britain's gas and electricity industries, has invited firms to bid to take part in a £9.75million, two year trial, funded by the DTI and DEFRA.

The pilot seeks to provide accurate data on how meters could make a significant contribution to reducing greenhouse gases and tackling fuel poverty.
